

BORES RIVAL'S FACE WITH LEAD

Jealous Woman Shoots Five Times at Girl Who Danced with Her Beau, and Last Bullet Hits Mark.

ONE IN THE HOSPITAL:
ONE IN POLICE STATION.

Tragic Ending of All-Night Dance, Which Was Brought About by the Fickleness of Palace Car Porter.

Anna Gordon is in the Roosevelt Hospital with a hole in each cheek, where a bullet from a revolver passed through her mouth, cutting out a couple of her teeth as it went along, and Lillian Watkins, twenty-three years old, a year older than the Gordon girl, is in the hands of the police, charged with assault with intent to kill.

The shooting occurred to-day at Thirty-fifth street and Eighth avenue after a dance in Thirty-seventh street, between Eighth and Ninth avenues. The dance in Thirty-seventh street last night was the real thing for society in the neighborhood. The participants were all negroes, and the affair had been looked forward to for weeks.

Almost White.

The Watkins girl, who is light, almost white, had been escorted to the dance by a palace car porter of whom she was very fond. Some time after midnight she became jealous of the fact that her escort's dance card was filled with the Gordon girl's name. "Do you suspect for a minute that you are to be my escort here and dance all night with a girl you never saw before?" she asked him.

"Why, ain't she all right?" said her beau, as he fingered his dance programme.

"They may do those things in St. Louis, where your run goes to, but they can't do it here," retorted the girl, and then she decided she would pull the hair from Miss Gordon's head.

Floor Committee Protest.
To this the Floor Committee objected, and while her wraps were given to her she was told no one must break up the ball, even though her escort did dances with some one else.

The Watkins woman went home and got her revolver. She waited until the dance broke up, and then the crowd, consisting of the Gordon girl, the Gordon girl, at Thirty-fifth street it was evident that the crowd at the dance was girded with steel and shot. The Watkins girl joined the home-going crowd with a whoop that sounded like the war cry of a Comanche.

"You'll dance with the devil the next time you dance!" she cried as she opened fire. Five times she blazed away, but while her intentions were good her aim was bad. It was not until the fifth shot that she perforated the Gordon girl's cheeks, who dropped to the sidewalk. Policemen came from all directions. Soon there were six of them. Four were carrying the wounded girl and two were taking care of the Watkins woman, who was still anxious to kill her rival.

PASSENGERS ON THE WATER WAGON HAVE BEEN RESCUED.

On Way to Newark Windstorm Blows Vehicle to Jersey Meadows—All Rescued, and Demon Rum Tied to Nick's Yacht

The friends and relatives of the fifty-eight sturdy and determined men who started away on the cruise of The Evening World's Water Wagon and who have been missing for two days will be relieved to learn that The Evening World to-day received a wireless message from the Kill von Kull stating that

RUNAWAY UPSETS WAGON, FOUR PERSONS INJURED.

Four persons were injured to-day by the runaway of a horse drawing a wagon of the National Biscuit Company on Eighth avenue near One Hundred and Twenty-fifth street. They are John O'Connor, driver of the wagon, of No. 119 West One Hundred and Twenty-fifth street; Bob O'Brien, of No. 40 West One Hundred and Twenty-fifth street, his assistant; and Tony and John Cusque, of No. 343 Eighth avenue, who were driving a peddler's wagon in the path of the runaway horse.

The horse bolted at One Hundred and Twenty-first and Eighth avenue. A block further up it overturned the peddler's wagon, throwing them out on their heads. At One Hundred and Twenty-fourth street it crashed into an "L" pillar and was demolished, its two occupants falling amid the debris. The two peddlers were taken to their homes after their hurts were dressed by an ambulance surgeon. O'Connor and O'Brien were taken to the J. Hood Wright Hospital. Their injuries are not dangerous.

the wagon was stranded on the Jersey Meadows at high tide yesterday morning, but that all on board were saved by the relief expedition which was sent out on Tuesday on Nick's yacht.

The despatch states that only ten of the fifty-eight were bound on the wagon, the others having been shaken off during the trip toward Newark, which was the destination of the wagon when it left here Monday night. The relatives of the missing forty-eight need not be worried. They have not been drowned in water, so far as is known. Their absence from the wagon is attributed to the rough Jersey roads, which jolted them off, and the heavy strain.

night there were three empty seats remaining. Numerous requests having been received from Newark for places on the wagon, the vehicle was sent to that city to pick up three citizens. After leaving Jersey City the wheels began to wobble, and the rear one on the right-hand side suddenly fell off, and at the same moment a terrific wind storm picked up the wagon and blew it over on the Jersey Meadows. Some of the forty-eight were lost at this time, but just how many is not known.

At any rate, the wagon landed in the rising water of the meadows with a bad starboard list. As soon as word was received that the wagon was in trouble Nick's yacht was dispatched to the rescue. Nick was instructed to go first to the Sandy Hook Life-Saving station for volunteers; also for a mortar, a rope and a breeches buoy. Two of the crew went along, and they said afterward that saving the crew of the Drummezier was child's play beside this. It was with the greatest difficulty that a line was dred across the wagon, but this was finally accomplished, and Bosh McCarty entered the breeches.

At the first sag of the rope Bosh struck the water and a loud blissing sound could be heard on Nick's yacht. Bosh was finally landed all right. The others came over in good shape. The fish swim over towing the Demon Rum. Two cables were attached to the Demon and a man placed in the back with a boat hook to puncture his face if he came too close.

The cruise is not to be given up. It will be continued on Nick's yacht, which is instructed to keep in deep water so no one can possibly fall overboard.

RUBE' SLEUTHS ROUTED BY COW

Disguised Detectives Seek to Find Prize Fight, but Striko Wrong Barn and Also Farmer with Pitchfork.

Burdened with horse-hair whippers and other old sleuth disguises, Capt. Nugent, Roundman Graf and three policemen of the Ocean Avenue station, Jersey City, were put to route by a pitchfork and a Jersey cow last night when the gallant cops went in search of a prize fight. The awful details:

CHAPTER I.

"Hist!" A sibilant whisper echoed through the Bergen section of Jersey City last night as five shadowy forms crept silently through the gathering gloom, deeply disguised by false chin-whiskers, straw hats and Alvin Jolson "rube" make-up. Only six men out of half a dozen would suspect they were sleuths, but it was indeed true.

"There is desperate work to-night," resumed Capt. Nugent, the leader, for it was none other than he. "We have received word that a prize-fight will be pulled off in a barn somewhere in this section. If any of you see a barn and identify it, speak up."

Like panthers Roundman Graf and Policemen Seiben, Tier and Donnelly crept after the intrepid Captain. Suddenly an exultant cry burst from them. Before them, hard by the Meadows, loomed a barn!

CHAPTER II.

"Great heavens, a barn!" gasped the sleuths, for it was indeed true. Light was streaming from the doorway and the disguised sleuths sauntered carelessly through it, chewing on straws and holding their bated breaths. A man was distributing a foot of hay with the aid of a fork when the sleuths entered and he eyed the intruders suspiciously. "What's the light, podner?" asked Capt. Nugent, with a stage drawl. Raymond Spellman, the farmer, for he was indeed he, took one look at the disguised detectives, and, assuming himself that only tramps could dress so let drive with the hay fork. A general misunderstanding ensued, during which one of the cops found himself raising a stall occupied by "Honest Boss," the family cow, and several tin milk cans. There was a "dull, sickening thud" and a crash of tin as cop and can came flying out of the stall just ahead of Boss's heels. The noise brought reinforcements from the house in the shape of Spellman's family, and all looked dark for the cops when—"Hold, in the name of the law!" the ringing voice of Capt. Nugent rang out, and in a moment he stood divested of his disguise.

Little remains to be told. The cops decided that they had found the wrong barn and, fending their disguises, hastily stole away without finding the fight.

Negro Vote Vexes Transvaal.
JOHANNESBURG, Jan. 12.—The Native Affairs Commission is fully agreed that a limitation must be placed on the colored vote, which it will show by stating evidence, is becoming a serious nuisance. The report will recommend several methods by which the desired end can be reached, but will insist that the present chaotic condition cannot be allowed to continue.
